Can't Believe It

February 18, 2008

I just can't believe it
How she told me that she loves me but inside she barely trusts me
Can't believe that she said it but didn't mean it

How could she tell me such strong words?
Love, four letters that I've never felt or held
Just can't see it to believe it
I can't make it or take it, still how could she even say it

Can't believe it, how she would carry me through this
So emotional the way she does it
And how she tells me over the phone but close can't show it
Love leads me on time and time and time, and time again

Unlike I'm like, where does this relationship of ours start and end?
But since you told me you loved me, I ask, did it ever truly begin?
I can't believe it still, that I just couldn't open to see it.

About the Author

Gary Simmons was born in Atlanta, Ga and began writing poetry as a teen. This collection is based on his views, feelings and thoughts on emotions through out his life. Now he shares his words journey with the world, and hopes to connect with others who can see the poetic visions.
